In this week's recap: Wall Street began last week with a heavy sell-off as investors appeared anxious about the U.S.-Iran war, elevated inflation, and fears of a potential tech correction.

Market Week: June 15, 2026

The Markets (as of market close June 12, 2026)

Wall Street began last week with a heavy sell-off as investors appeared anxious about the U.S.-Iran war, elevated inflation, and fears of a potential tech correction. However, stocks staged a massive turnaround midweek, driven by easing tensions in the Middle East and the largest initial public offering in U.S. financial history. Consumer staples and real estate led the market sectors, while information technology and communication services lagged. Crude oil prices reached an eight-week low as the potential for a deal to reopen the Strait of Hormuz gained traction. Gold prices declined for a second straight week on improving risk appetite.

Eye on the Week Ahead

The Federal Open Market Committee meets this week. With inflation at levels above the Fed's 2.0% target and solid job gains, it is unlikely that the Committee will lower the federal funds target rate range at this time.
